1. Coal Ash Rule

Coal ash, also referred to as coal combustion residuals (CCR), is produced whenever coal is burned at coal-fired power plants used to generate electricity or industrial water generated in the United States. While a significant portion of coal ash is reused, often in the manufacture of cement or wall board, the remaining is disposed of in landfills or surface impoundment ponds.

The ash contains contaminants like mercury, cadmium, and arsenic, and without proper management, these contaminants can pollute ground and surface water, air, and soil contained in nearby impoundments. In response to major coal ash spills in England, France, and the United States, in 2012 the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency established federal regulations governing the disposal of coal ash and increased oversight on associated water reuse discharges. What follows is a timeline and summary of relevant rules during this process.
